Break down barriers to the arts for pupils with SEND

Schools and colleges are being urged not to get too focused on the arts they deliver, but rather focus on teaching and learning within the sector.

This is because pupils who have SEND are often more likely to want to access the arts than pupils who do not have SEND. However, schools and colleges have been asked to ensure that pupils with SEND have access to the arts in the same way as pupils who do not have SEND.

The Arts Council England has launched a new campaign called “The Arts for All”, which aims to encourage schools and colleges to offer pupils with SEND access to the arts.

The campaign will run until the end of the year, with workshops and presentations for schools and colleges on how to implement the campaign.

“Break down barriers to the arts for pupils with SEND”

The campaign is part of a wider national strategy to improve access to the arts for pupils with SEND.

The campaign will provide schools and colleges with practical advice on how to implement the campaign and will include case studies of schools and colleges that have successfully implemented the campaign.

Schools and colleges are encouraged to take part in the campaign to ensure that pupils with SEND have access to the arts in the same way as pupils who do not have SEND.

“Break down barriers to the arts for pupils with SEND”

The campaign will run until the end of the year, with workshops and presentations for schools and colleges on how to implement the campaign.

The campaign will provide schools and colleges with practical advice on how to implement the campaign and will include case studies of schools and colleges that have successfully implemented the campaign.

Schools and colleges are encouraged to take part in the campaign to ensure that pupils with SEND have access to the arts in the same way as pupils who do not have SEND.

“Break down barriers to the arts for pupils with SEND”

The campaign will run until the end of the year, with workshops and presentations for schools and colleges on how to implement the campaign.

The campaign will provide schools and colleges with practical advice on how to implement the campaign and will include case studies of schools and colleges that have successfully implemented the campaign.

Schools and colleges are encouraged to take part in the campaign to ensure that pupils with SEND have access to the arts in the same way as pupils who do not have SEND.

“Break down barriers to the arts for pupils with SEND”

The campaign will run until the end of the year, with workshops and presentations for schools and colleges on how to implement the campaign.

The campaign will provide schools and colleges with practical advice on how to implement the campaign and will include case studies of schools and colleges that have successfully implemented the campaign.

Schools and colleges are encouraged to take part in the campaign to ensure that pupils with SEND have access to the arts in the same way as pupils who do not have SEND.

“Break down barriers to the arts for pupils with SEND”

The campaign will run until the end of the year, with workshops and presentations for schools and colleges on how to implement the campaign.

The campaign will provide schools and colleges with practical advice on how to implement the campaign and will include case studies of schools and colleges that have successfully implemented the campaign.

Schools and colleges are encouraged to take part in the campaign to ensure that pupils with SEND have access to the arts in the same way as pupils who do not have SEND.

“Break down barriers to the arts for pupils with SEND”

The campaign will run until the end of the year, with workshops and presentations for schools and colleges on how to implement the campaign.

The campaign will provide schools and colleges with practical advice on how to implement the campaign and will include case studies of schools and colleges that have successfully implemented the campaign.

Schools and colleges are encouraged to take part in the campaign to ensure that pupils with SEND have access to the arts in the same way as pupils who do not have SEND.

“Break down barriers to the arts for pupils with SEND”

The campaign will run until the end of the year, with workshops and presentations for schools and colleges on how to implement the campaign.

The campaign will provide schools and colleges with practical advice on how to implement the campaign and will include case studies of schools and colleges that have successfully implemented the campaign.

Schools and colleges are encouraged to take part in the campaign to ensure that pupils with SEND have access to the arts in the same way as pupils who do not have SEND.